

Teleconference

A Student's Introduction to Self-regulation

Hosted by the College of Nurses of Ontario

these teleconferences provide a forum to learn more about the role of the regulatory body in protecting the public. The teleconferences are geared toward nurse educators, clinical faculty and all Ontario baccalaureate and practical nursing students. Students from any nursing education program year throughout Ontario are invited to participate. Please join us in an open dialogue with College of Nurses of Ontario staff and nursing students and faculty from across the province.

Registration

Register online by visiting www.cno.org. Registration is free and space is limited; group registrations are encouraged. Please book early and register student or faculty groups to ensure the maximum number of participants. Please submit any questions related to the topic with your registration.

Dial-in instructions for the teleconference will be e-mailed to participants who have pre-registered for the event.

The suggested reference material for this teleconference is the College's fact sheet entitled - What is Nursing? Please also view the CNO & You: A Student's Guide to Self-regulation video, which is hosted by recent nursing graduates and nurses educated outside of Ontario. The fact sheet and video are available on the College's website.

An online evaluation form will be posted on the College's website after the teleconference. Your feedback is important and will help us plan future sessions.
