Understanding When Psychotherapy is a Controlled Act.

June 2016
The practitioner responds to an assessed need or diagnosis through the use of therapeutic interventions or techniques. The treatment involves one or more interventions or approaches based on recognized psychotherapeutic theories, models or frameworks and/or empirical evidence. The practitioner builds a strong therapeutic alliance with the individual. The relationship between the practitioner and the individual is integral to the treatment and based on clear professional boundaries.

The descriptions below provide additional clarity on what is meant by a “serious disorder of thought, cognition, mood, emotional regulation, perception or memory.”

Thought Impairment in concentration, persistence, and pace. May include delusions, or hallucinations, unwanted or intrusive thoughts that distort an individual’s ability to discern different states such as reality, fantasy and imagination.

Cognition Persistent difficulty in understanding the meaning or importance of something, learning new things, concentrating or making decisions.

Mood Prominent and persistent affective disturbance characterized by significant lows (diminished interest or pleasure in all, or almost all, activities) or significant highs (elevated, expansive or irritable disposition).

Emotional regulation Persistent difficulty controlling emotion or emotional responses that do not appropriately fit the situation. May exhibit marked changes in moods or report difficulties with interpersonal relationships.

Perception Difficultly recognizing or making sense of sensory stimuli needed to understand, learn or prompt a particular action or reaction; may be accompanied by diminished, exaggerated, distorted or impaired response to the stimuli.

Memory Difficultly storing and retrieving or recalling information about their abilities and previously experienced connections, sensations, impressions, information or ideas.

"Treating, by means of psychotherapy technique, delivered through a therapeutic relationship, an individual’s serious disorder of thought, cognition, mood, emotional regulation, perception or memory that may seriously impair the individual’s judgment, insight, behaviour, communication or social functioning."

1. Treating An individual’s serious disorder of thought, cognition, mood, emotional regulation, perception or memory that may seriously impair the individual’s judgment, insight, behaviour, communication or social functioning.
2. By means of psychotherapy technique Treating, by means of psychotherapy technique, delivered through a therapeutic relationship, an individual’s serious disorder of thought, cognition, mood, emotional regulation, perception or memory that may seriously impair the individual’s judgment, insight, behaviour, communication or social functioning.
3. Delivered through a therapeutic relationship The practitioner builds a strong therapeutic alliance with the individual. The relationship between the practitioner and the individual is integral to the treatment and based on clear professional boundaries.
4. Judgment Difficulty making sound, reasoned or responsible decisions and contingencies. Reduced ability to predict and anticipate.
5. Insight Difficulty recognizing mistakes, drawing connections between a problem, action and its consequences; lack of awareness of the impact behavior may have on oneself and/or others; may have difficulty formulating a plan.
6. Behaviour Difficulty maintaining conduct within the limits prescribed by major societal norms, laws, rules; may violate the rights of others or disregard safety of self.
7. Communication Difficulty receiving, sending, processing or comprehending concepts or words in context — verbally or nonverbally; may use words and meanings inappropriately, may not be able to follow directions; may have trouble getting others to understand what they are communicating.
8. Social Functioning Difficulty with day-to-day functioning that interferes with performance at work or school, in relationships, taking care of self or connecting with others.
